

Integra

Integra and Codman are related through a business acquisition. In 2017, Integra LifeSciences acquired Codman Neurosurgery from Johnson & Johnson's subsidiary, DePuy Synthes. Codman was a well-established name in neurosurgery, with a strong portfolio of medical devices for the brain, spine, and central nervous system. This acquisition allowed Integra to expand its product offerings in neurosurgery, integrating Codman's expertise and products into its portfolio.

The acquisition included Codman's devices for neuro-monitoring, hydrocephalus management (such as shunts), and surgical instruments, enhancing Integra's presence in the global neurosurgical market. The merger allowed Integra to offer a more comprehensive range of products for both cranial and spinal procedures.
